Today, cocktails are valued under the umbrella of mixology, a sub-branch of gastronomy, as the “art of mixing alcoholic and non-alcoholic beverages”.

Generally, a cocktail is made from a mixture of three or four different types of alcoholic drinks or fruit juices that are compatible with each other, and fruit juices, flavored syrups, some bitters and sauces and different aromas are added.

However, for people who are sensitive to alcohol and children, non-alcoholic cocktails are made without mixing alcohol and generally have an exotic and tropical appearance.

The glasses of cocktails with so many mixtures also indicate a certain type of taste specific to each type of drink. When you choose the right glass for a cocktail, you also affect the taste of the cocktail and the ritual of enjoying it.
